But then, suddenly, the music stopped. Lief open the eyes and looked inside inside at Manus. The Ralad man was rigid, the flute still held to his lips. His eyes, wide and glazed with fear, were staring straight ahead. Slowly, Lief turned to see what he was looking at. It was Soldeen. Munched water poured from his back and slime dripped from the holes and lumps in his mottled skin as he slid onto the shore, forcing a great trough in the ooze. He was huge eÁÁÁ far larger than he had realized. If he lunged for them now, he could reach them. He could crush them all with one snap of his terrible jaws. And yet he did not attack. He watched them, waiting. eÁÁÁBack!eÁÁÁ Barda muttered under his breath. eÁÁÁBack away. Slowly eÁÁÁeÁÁÁ eÁÁÁDO NOT MOVE!eÁÁÁ the hollow, growling command lashed out at them, freezing them to the spot. Shocked, terrified, and confused, they stared, unable to believe that it was the monster who had spoken. And yet already he was turning his burning eyes to the trembling Manus, and was speaking again. eÁÁÁPLAY!eÁÁÁ he ordered. Manus forced his lips and fingers to move. At last, the music began again, hesitating and feeble at first, but gaining in strength. Soldeen closed his eyes. He was utterly still, poised half in and half out of the water. Like a hideous statue he faced them, while mingled mud and slime slowly dried on his skin in lumpy streaks. Lief felt a light touch on his leg. Manus was nudging him with his foot, making signals with his eyes. This is your chance to escape, ManuseÁÁÁs eyes were saying. Climb up the rocks, move back through the pass, while he is distracted. Lief hesitated. Jamine jerked her head at him impatiently. Go! her form told him. You have the Belt. You, at least, must survive, or all is lost. But it was too late. SoldeeneÁÁÁs eyes had opened once more, and this time they were fixed on Lief. eÁÁÁÁWhy have you come to this forbidden place?eÁÁÁ he growled. Lief wet his lips. What should he say? eÁÁÁÁDo not try to lie.eÁÁÁÁ Soldeen warned. eÁÁÁÁFor I will know if you do, I will kill you." Flute music broke and stopped as if Manus suddenly lost his breath. "PLAY!" Rugged Soldeen, without moving his gaze from Lief. Trematente, the Ralad man obeyed. Lief made his decision. He raised his chin. "We came to look for a certain stone, which has a special meaning for us," he said clearly, on the soft and undulating sound of the flute. "It was abandoned by the sisy, in this lake, over sixteen years ago. "I don't know anything about time," he gave the beast. "But I know the stone. I know somebody someone would seek it." Lief forced himself to continue, even if the throat seemed suffocated. "You know where?" he asked. "It's in my maintenance," Soldeen cultivated. "It is my reward - the only thing in this bitter place and only that comforts me in my misery. Do you think I'd let you take without anything in return?" " Name your price!" Barda said. "If it is within our power, we will pay it. We will go from here and find what --" Soldeen rose up, and seemed to smile. "You don't need to look for my price," he said gently. "I will give you the stone in exchange for a companion." He turned his big head to look at Manus. Lief felt a thrill through it. He swallowed. "We cannot --" he began. "Give me the little man," Soldeen hit. "I like his face, and the music he does. He will come to the lake with me and sit on the weeping stone. Play for me through endless days, lonely nights. He will relieve my pain, for as long as he lives." The lief heard Jamine draw a sharp breath and looked around. Manus was risen and was advancing. "No, Manus!" Barda shouted, holding his arm. Manus was very pale, but his head was tall. He fought against Barda's grip. "I want to join you!", exquisite Soldeen. "Let him come." "We will not do it!" Jamine shouted, catchingfrom the other arm. "It would sacrifice for us, but we will not allow it!" "Give me him, or I'll kill you," Soldeen grew up, the thorns rising on his back. "I will destroy you, and your flesh will be devoured by the mud creatures until nothing remains, but the bones." A wave of anger rose in Lief, burning like fire. He stood up and threw himself in front of Manus, protecting him from the front, for Barda and Jamine were protecting him on the sides. "So do it!" he cried, drawing the sword. "But if you do, you will also kill your partner, because you are too big to take one of us without others!" "Let's see!" Rugged Soldeen, who is moving forward, The reef carved for the attack, but at the last moment the beast twisted like a snake, and three of the thorns spread under his eyes ran under the arm of Lief, tearing off the ribbon shirt and running through the folds of his cloak. A simple launch of Soldeen's head, and Lief was masturbated away from Manus and threw himself away from his feet. For two terrifying seconds he dangled in half air, fighting for breath as the strangling ties of the cloak bit in the throat. There was a roar in his ears and a red fog in front of his eyes. He knew it would be unconscious at the time. The mantle was double-cut, and he couldn't unpack it. There was only one thing he could do. With the last of his strength he twisted, he killed himself and took one of the thorns in his hands. Immediately, the suffocating band around the loose neck. Panting, he pulled up until he was sitting on his spine. He walked her until she was under the eye of the beast. Her shirt was torn, and she shook herself at Soldeen's feeling slippd, hid on her naked skin. But he still clinged there, holding close, his sword stopped in his hand. "Drag me down in the mud and slimerown me, if you will, Soldeen," he whispered. Moored. There is a need to be nuned Ashloy. She could clearly see them as if the Deltora belt page was open in front of him. The great ruby, the symbol of happiness, red like blood, becomes pale in the presence of evil, or when the misfortune threatens - the ruby is red, he thought Lief. The ruby becomes pale in the presence of evil. And when the red pales, what's that's not pink? The gem in hand was the ruby, its rich color emptied by the evil of the lake. But surely he was faded even more in the last few moments. Now he was no longer dark about the palm of his hand. A terrible fear was grabbed. Á e á - á "Soldeen! Á e á e cried. "We have to be ásy but at that moment, the sky seemed to open up with a frantic strip of light. With a frightening and furious sound, a cloud of yellow smoke that infiltrated his breath. "PLAY!" Rugged Soldeen, without moving his gaze from Lief. Trematente, the Ralad man obeyed. Lief made his decision. He raised his chin. "We came to look for a certain stone, which has a special meaning for us," he said clearly, on the soft and undulating sound of the flute. "It was abandoned by the sisy, in this lake, over sixteen years ago. "I don't know anything about time," he gave the beast. "But I know the stone. I know somebody someone would seek it." Lief forced himself to continue, even if the throat seemed suffocated. "You know where?" he asked. "It's in my maintenance," Soldeen cultivated. "It is my reward - the only thing in this bitter place and only that comforts me in my misery. Do you think I'd let you take without anything in return?" " Name your price!" Barda said. "If it is within our power, we will pay it. We will go from here and find what --" Soldeen rose up, and seemed to smile. "You don't need to look for my price," he said gently. "I will give you the stone in exchange for a companion." He turned his big head to look at Manus. Lief felt a thrill through it. He swallowed. "We cannot --" he began. "Give me the little man," Soldeen hit. "I like his face, and the music he does. He will come to the lake with me and sit on the weeping stone. Play for me through endless days, lonely nights. He will relieve my pain, for as long as he lives." The lief heard Jamine draw a sharp breath and looked around. Manus was risen and was advancing. "No, Manus!" Barda shouted, holding his arm. Manus was very pale, but his head was tall. He fought against Barda's grip. "I want to join you!", exquisite Soldeen. "Let him come." "We will not do it!" Jamine shouted, catchingfrom the other arm. "It would sacrifice for us, but we will not allow it!" "Give me him, or I'll kill you," Soldeen grew up, the thorns rising on his back. "I will destroy you, and your flesh will be devoured by the mud creatures until nothing remains, but the bones." A wave of anger rose in Lief, burning like fire. He stood up and threw himself in front of Manus, protecting him from the front, for Barda and Jamine were protecting him on the sides. "So do it!" he cried, drawing the sword. "But if you do, you will also kill your partner, because you are too big to take one of us without others!" "Let's see!" A simple launch of Soldeen's head, and Lief was masturbated away from Manus and threw himself away from his feet. For two terrifying seconds he dangled in half air, fighting for breath as the strangling ties of the cloak bit in the throat. There was a roar in his ears and a red fog in front of his eyes. He knew it would be unconscious at the time. The mantle was double-cut, and he couldn't unpack it. There was only one thing he could do.
